A lawyer or lawyer is a professional jurist legally authorized to exercise or practice law. The lawyer's profession consists of applying abstract legal theories to specific cases, representing and directing the technical-legal defense of his client in all kinds of judicial and administrative procedures.

Lawyers often hold high political or civil service positions. In general, most countries require university studies in Law and be incorporated into a bar association or have some type of state authorization to practice the profession. In addition to knowledge in various areas of law, their training is complemented by knowledge of history, philosophy, culture, literature, oratory, economics, sociology, forensic science, logic, psychology, anthropology and politics, for which they usually hold hierarchical positions in the administration of a country. They can be oriented towards a private profile, such as advisors and representatives of natural and/or legal persons, or towards a public profile, linked to the government and public administration.
